Portrait of Kathleen Waggoner by Donna Granata
Focus on the Portrait Series 2005

Kathleen Waggoner shapes the song of woman - searching, triumphant and proud - in clay. It is the exploration and expression of human emotion, of feelings not easily put into words, that drives her work. Originally trained as a painter she became increasingly aware of the distance between what she was feeling and the two-dimensional representation on the canvas. During an emotionally challenging time in her own life she enrolled in a ceramics class at Moorpark Collage and found the physical, hands-on connection with the clay eliminated that distance. Inspired by myth, native cultures and her own on-going exploration of self, her work is at once iconic and playful, sensual and spiritual. In her most recent figures she has carved both personal and universal symbols directly into the wet clay reminiscent of ritualistic scarring or perhaps to witness that from personal scars comes beauty.
